Typography Inspiration

01

Weight, not size

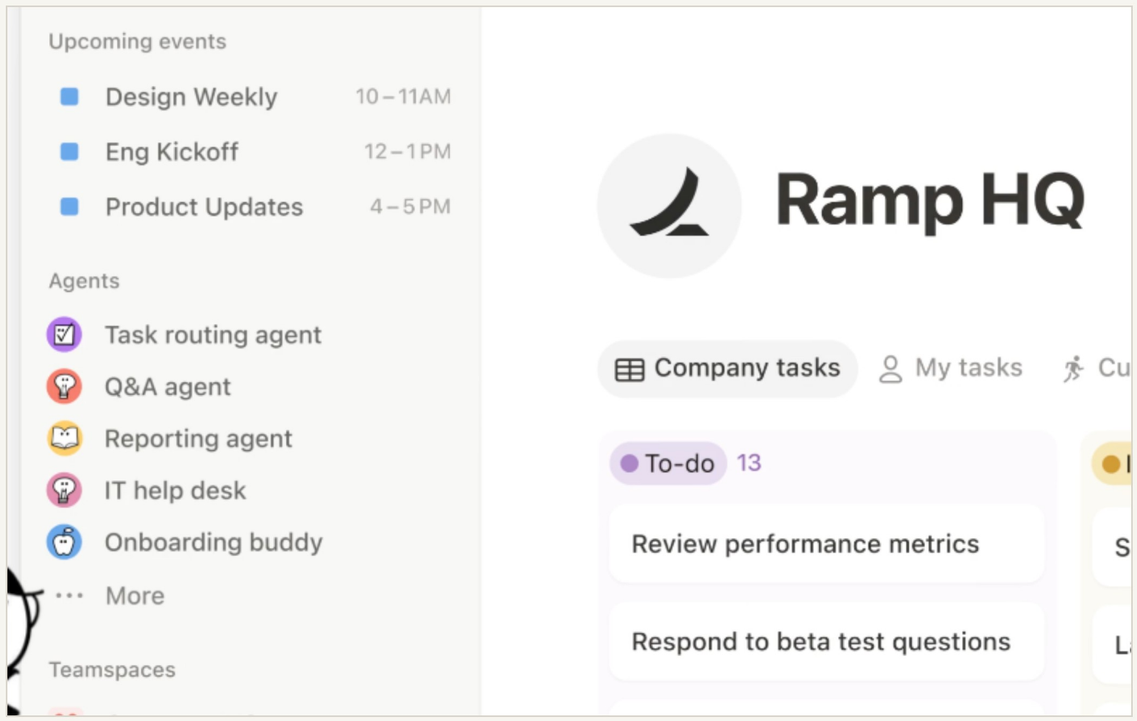

Gmail shows unread mail in bold and read mail in regular, all at one size. My labels and buttons are Libre Franklin 600, body text 400.

02

Clear levels

Linear has a heading, body text, and grey details like “2 min ago”. My item title, its facts, and muted times follow the same three levels.

03

Big title, quiet labels

Notion pairs one large page title with small grey section labels. My sidebar groups, Campus and Yours, are small and muted under a big heading.

MY CHOICES

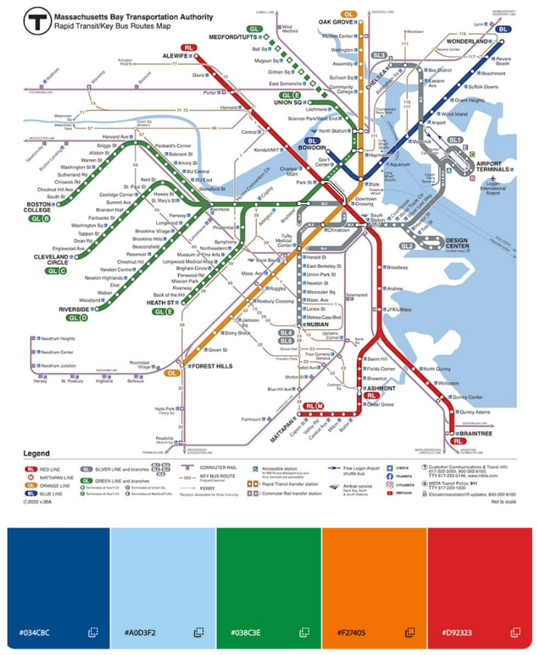

Clear and familiar

A clean sans-serif for the interface, like all three. I added a classic serif for headings to make it feel welcoming.

Source Serif 4 · 700 · 28 px	Lost around campus
Source Serif 4 · 600 · 19 px	Pink water bottle
Libre Franklin · 400 · 16 px	Building 2 · by the lobby bench
Libre Franklin · 600 · 14 px	Report an item · 21 min ago

Color Inspiration

Bold, distinct hues that are easy to tell apart at a glance

01 MBTA transit map

02 Olympic pictograms

03 Google

04 Painted signposts

COLOR

Distinct, not similar

I wanted to use colors like green, red and blue because they look very different from each other, so it's easy to visually distinguish between them, compared to similar shades like red and burgundy. In Lost & Found, each item status gets its own distinct color.

Easy vs. hard to tell apart

Red · green · blue

Red · burgundy

In Lost & Found

Lost · Found · Returned

Red-orange, blue and green differ in hue and lightness, so a badge reads at a glance.
